Folklife Circus Arts Festival in Washington DC.

Robert Burridge and his Circus Paintings have been invited to exhibit at the Smithsonian in Washington DC, during the Circus Arts Folklife Festival on the National Mall of the United States.

During live circus performances, Mr. Burridge will present his experimental circus-related artwork at the Festival Marketplace, which is expecting up to 60,000 visitors during the week of June 29 through July 9, 2017.

Sabrina Lynn Motley, Director, Smithsonian Folklife Festival expressed her delight that he will share his circus-related knowledge and skills with millions of visitors onsite and online from around the world.

During which time, Burridge has been invited to participate at the National Endowment of the Arts one-day forum to focus on the new and vibrant circus community entitled "Circus for the 21st Century." Said Burridge, "I am beyond thrilled, because my current paintings capture the dedicated American Circus Family and their long history of exhibiting dazzling performances for our entertainment. When I go to the circus I can't stop smiling!"

Located between the nation's Capitol and the Washington Monument, look for the circus tent and attractions throughout the Mall.
